before the third period, but each time the Red Wings answered a little more than a minute later to snuff out any momentum. They added a back-breaking goal with 22 seconds remaining in the second period to take a four-goal lead.

The last time the Kings allowed eight goals in a game was Oct. 12, 2007, an 8-6 loss to visiting Boston. Bernier, a 19-year-old rookie at the time, made his third career start in the loss and allowed seven goals. He lost two days later to the Red Wings and did not return to the NHL for another 2½ years ... The Kings have allowed 12 more goals than they've scored in first period this season.

DETROIT, MI — When I stated the Detroit Red Wings would have a chance to redeem themselves after the heart-breaking loss to the Nashville Predators on Thursday, December 15, I had no idea the redemption would amount to a full scale throttling of the Los Angeles Kings.

A Fan's Reaction: The Red Wings absolutely dominated the Kings by the score of 8-2 on Saturday, December 17. Detroit improves to 20-10 on the season while Los Angeles drops to 14-14.

Detroit got off to a quick start with Drew Miller and Cory Emmerton each scoring within the first two minutes of the game. The Red Wings were out for blood and goaltender Jimmy Howard had plenty to make up for after his last appearance in the net. Niklas Kronwall added a goal of his own just over eight minutes in making the score 3-0 in favor of the Red Wings.

That was it for Kings' goaltender Jonathan Quick, who was removed after giving up three goals on seven shots. Backup goaltender Jonathan Bernier would take over duties for the remainder of the game. The goaltender change must have given the Kings some confidence as Los Angeles finally got on the board as Davis Drewiske slipped one past Howard to narrow the Red Wings' lead to 3-1. Just over a minute later, Cory Emmerton found the net for the second time in the period to give Detroit a 4-1 lead heading into the first well-deserved intermission.

The second period remained quiet for the first half until Jarret Stoll cut the Detroit lead to 4-2. Los Angeles would be shut down for the remainder of the night while the Red Wings would have their way with Bernier. Henrik Zetterberg and Pavel Datsyuk would each add a goal of their own to give Detroit a 6-2

GIRL NAMES A FAITHFUL PLUM

True Story of a Dancer From China and How She Achieved Her Dream

REVIEWED BY LISA MARSEILLE

These days, reality TV shows like "American Idol" inundate us with the sad stories of talented hopefuls, most of them eventually let down. Featured in condensed clips, orchestrated with sound bites, their stories never inspire true reflection, but we watch anyway. We are enthralled by the idea of someone emerging from obscurity to achieve stardom. Making your dream come true — your own individual dream versus that of the collective — is the equivalent of the individual pursuit of happiness.

Forecasting Snow

CHILDREN'S BOOKS SET IN WINTRY LANDSCAPES

With the sparest text and softest watercolors, McGhee and Rosenthal lovingly evoke the pleasures of the season's first snow. A red-capped boy makes a snowman, giving him pebble eyes, a carrot nose and, finally, his own red hat to wear. When the snow melts, the snowman doesn't really disappear: he is in the falling water, the rain on the ocean and the fog. He is always with the boy and will always come back in this tender paean to cold weather and enduring friendship.

Inspired by a true story Carnesi heard on NPR, this small-scale book tells the harrowing story of a dog who inadvertently boarded an ice floe on the Vistula River in Poland and drifted out to the Baltic Sea. Children will whimper in commiseration with the poor chilled creature as various attempts at rescue fail. In this debut, Carnesi conveys the immensity of the scenery as well as the intimacy of the dog's tale. And the fear abates with the story's reassuringly warm and cozy ending.

A PIT BULL PLAYS CUPID

By CATHI HANAUER

According to legend, the Random House co-founder Bennett Cerf once said that to guarantee a best-selling book, you should title it "Lincoln's Doctor's Dog." In these dog-crazed times, you could probably skip both the president and the doctor — especially if you throw an adoring retriever or a bug-eyed terrier on the cover. Think of "The Dogs of Babel," "Marley & Me," "You Had Me at Woof"; the list goes on. "Stay With Me," Paul Griffin's young adult addition to the dog-lit pack, prominently features a massive-headed but smiling pit bull both on its cover and in the story. This funny, wrenching, often heartbreaking novel, Griffin's third, brings contemporary characters and authentic street atmosphere, not to mention dogs and dysfunction, Forbidden, discouraged or dismissed by adults, comic books have always been schoolyard currency, bought and swapped by children and read avidly by children themselves, whether eager or reluctant readers. (It was one way for the bookish to get the other kids to like them; trust me, I know.) But as Françoise Mouly, the art editor at The New Yorker and founder of the Toon Books line of comic books for children, has pointed out, children got left behind when comics became comix and superheroes acquired Shakespearean dimensions in graphic novels and film.

Their very kind aunt was subject to frequent dizzy spells, thus causing much anxiety a

Now came great news! Stunning news—joyous news, in fact. It came from a neighboring state, where the family's only surviving relative lived. It was Sally's relative—a sort of va ond or third cousin by the name of Tilbury Foster, seventy and a bachelor, reputed well off and corresponding sour and crusty. Sally had tried to make up to him once, by letter, in
